'Revolution and Intervention'Jagan and Berle Debate
Latin Picture at Teach-In

TORONTO, Oct. 10 (AP) — Cheddi Jagan, former prime minister of British Guiana, said a military-industrial elite controls the United States and indirectly Latin America.

He told about 3,500 persons at an international teach-in at the University of Toronto that only a change in the U.S. political structure could lead to a solution to the social, political and economic inequality in Latin America.

A New Order

Adolf A. Berle, a professor at Columbia University Law School and a Latin American specialist with the State Department, said he believes Jagan wants a conquest of the whole world by a new social order. He did not spell out the new social order, but presumably he meant communism.

Jagan said the U.S. military-industrial elite has consistently supported corrupt dictatorships in Latin America which were opposed to any reform.

He was applauded when he said the U.S. power complex was opposed to basic structural changes in Latin America and that all Latin American attempts to bring about these changes failed because of American opposition.

Third member of the teach-in panel on "Latin America — Revolution and Intervention" was Andres Lockward, 28, vice-secretary-general of the Social Christian Party of the Dominican Republic. He said the U.S.-sponsored Alliance for Progress was a "complete failure."

It had brought Latin America only money for dictators and guns for the military, he said. In his own country American-supplied weapons had been used by 40,000 Dominicans supported by 42,000 U.S. troops to suppress a popular revolt, he asserted.

Officials estimated the teach-in was heard by 100,000 students at more than 80 universities in the United States and Canada via a telephone hook-up.

Three proposals for the future of the Organization of American States were offered, including a suggestion for its abolition.

Professor Adolph A. Berle of Columbia University Law School, a U.S. State Department expert on Latin American affairs, said the OAS and the United Nations should be used to supervise economic aid measures to Latin America and assure no outside power is permitted to foment revolution in Latin American countries.

Lockward said the OAS must be disbanded and replaced by an Organization of Latin American States.

He said the OAS has been used to justify and excuse intervention in the internal affairs of Latin American countries by the United States.

Jagan said the OAS headquarters should be moved from Washington to Latin America.

He said the United States is widely viewed as having the votes of many OAS members "in its pocket," and there is little dissent within the organization.
